Before the Europeans began settling in Australia during the early 1800s, there were about 300,000 Aborigines on the continent. 34 the new settlers brought diseases that killed many of these native people. Today there are only about 125,000 Aborigines living in Australia, many of 35 now live in the cities.

The way of life of the Aborigines, who still live like their ancestors, is closely related to nature. They live 36 hunters and gatherers and do not produce crops or raise livestock. The Aborigines have no permanent settlements, only small camps near watering places. Because they live on the land, they must frequently move around 37 food. They have few belongings and little or no clothing.

Some tribes of Aborigines, especially 38 that live in the desert, may move 100 times in a year. They might move more than 1,000 miles on foot during that time. These tribes set up 39 homes, such as tents made of grass.

The Aborigines have 40 written language, but they have developed a system of hand signals. These are used during hunting when silence is necessary and during their religious ceremonies when talking is forbidden.

IV. 閱讀測驗：以下有兩篇短文，其後共有 10 個題目，為第 41-50 題，請閱讀短文後，選出最適當的答案。

Although most people believe that formal schooling is required for scientific success, a college degree is not always necessary. An excellent example of a man who won fame as a scientist without academic training is Vincent J. Schaefer. His formal education ended after two years of high school when he had to go to work in an untrained job at General Electric. Because of his inventive mind and his skill as a model maker, he was soon allowed to try his own experiments in the company laboratory. His natural curiosity made him wonder about clouds. He developed, after many tries, a method of making clouds rain when they would not normally do so. This method, called seeding, has been very helpful to farmers, and it won him much fame. In 1961 he became director and leading professor of the Atmospheric Sciences Research Center of the University of New York. In 1981, this professor, who had never gone to college, published a highly respected book, A Field Guide to the Atmosphere. Schaefer approves of college education; but he believes that, for people who can work on their own, who learn by doing, who read books, who make friends with worthwhile people, and who, most of all, are interested in the world and everything in it, a college degree is unnecessary.
