Mental and physical health professionals in the United States may consider referring clients and patients to a music therapist for a number of reasons. It seems a particularly good choice for the social worker who is coordinating a client's case. Music therapists use music to establish a relationship with the patient and to improve the patient's health, using highly structured musical interactions. Patients and therapists may sing, play instruments, dance, compose, or simply listen to music.

The course of training for music therapists is comprehensive. In addition to formal musical and therapy training, music therapists are taught to discern what kinds of interventions will be most beneficial for each individual patient. Because each patient is different and has different goals, the music therapist must be able to understand the patient's situation and choose the music and activities that will do the most toward helping the patient achieve his or her goals. The referring social worker can help this process by clearly communicating each client's history.

Although patients may develop their musical skills, that is not the main goal of music therapy. Any client who needs particular work on communication or on academic, emotional, and social skills, and who is not responding to traditional therapy, is an excellent candidate for music therapy.

(A) Clients who need to improve social skills.
(B) Clients who need to resolve political issues.
(C) Clients who need to develop academic skills.
(D) Clients who need to work on communication.
45. Which of the following inferences can be drawn from the passage?

A study released recently by Voxburner, a United Kingdom-based research firm that tracks how youths consume media, suggests that over 60 percent of British teenagers and young adults aged 16 to 24 prefer physical books over E-books when they were asked which media they preferred in physical form. The feeling of a printed book, with its rough paper and thick spine, is an absorbing and pleasurable experience — sometimes more so than reading on a device. Some recent reports have found that this tactile feeling of paper can also create a much more immersive learning experience for readers. Why? Several scientists believe it is neurological.

A research report published earlier this year in the International Journal of Education Research found that students in school who read text on printed paper scored significantly higher in reading comprehension tests than students who read the same text in digital forms. Furthermore, according to an October report by the Book Industry Study Group, which monitors the publishing industry, the sales of E-books have slowed over the past year and currently comprise about 30 percent of all books sold.

There were two main reasons given for the preference for paper books over digital books. First, many of those questioned said they liked to feel an actual printed book, versus a digital experience where a screen can be flat and lacking imagination. The other reason given not to buy digital books is the price. Many of the young British people questioned in the study seemed unable to understand the high prices of E-books, which can range between $10 and $15, on average, compared with paperback books, which can cost almost exactly the same, sometimes less.

46. What is the best title for this passage?
(A) The Importance of Reading                      (B) The Advantages of Digital Learning
(C) The Production of E-Books                      (D) The Benefits of Printed Books
47. Which of the following can prove the immersive learning effect of printed text?
(A) A built-in dictionary and a thousand books can be stuffed on a single digital device.
(B) Students reading printed text scored higher than those who read digital text.
(C) Physical books are favored by most British teenagers and young adults.
(D) Printed books are actually less expensive than or almost the same as E-books.
